AND RHINOS MIGHT FLY

Ever pictured a rhino on a plane? Neither had we, until we discovered Rhinos Without Borders, an initiative led by andBeyond and Great Plains Conservation that jets endangered rhinoceroses from the unsafe areas of South Africa to Botswana, known for its no-tolerance policy to poaching. The first batch of these hulking mammals took to the air in May last year, and the organisation is now celebrating the arrival of the first calf born to one of these travellers. The conservationists have committed to moving 100 creatures to help Botswana reach its target of 400 rhinos in the country by 2016, so if you have a soft spot for these horned beasts jump onto the website to support the program.

AFTERNOON DELIGHT

What better way to spend an afternoon than sipping a cup of locally harvested tea and watching the twice-daily train roll through the Sri Lankan countryside? This beautiful shot was captured in the town of Ella by Wade and Sarah Harris of @wadeandsarahblog and shared on Instagram with #getlostnow. Check out their account for more travel adventures.

BOTTOMS UP

Finding drinking water is a never-ending part of travel. Chris Staring of Coburg, VIC, shares a handy way to keep H₂O at the ready, no plastic bottle required.

“Buy yourself a bota bag to carry water (and other drinks) while travelling. It works much better than bulky drink bottles – the teardrop shape naturally contours to your body, they can be rolled up and pocketed when empty, and they’re an awesome conversation starter.”
